

Harriet Sacks

BBC Journalist and Author of 'The Values Compass'

Harriet Sacks' grandfather always told her to invest in bricks and mortar but it took her over 50 years to act on that sage advice. Following several careers in advertising, TV and medicine and four daughters along the way she finally acted on Grandpa Sid's advice last year by acquiring a guaranteed residential rental business in Coventry last year called Forward Thinking Lettings. She has professionalised the business and is upgrading and expanding its stock before setting out to grow the brand nationwide through acquisitions and franchising.

Harriet firmly believes that the conventional approach to property investment has been damaged by increased regulation and interest rates and as a consequence investors are exiting the industry causing a huge shortage of rentable properties. Her dynamic approach offers a viable solution and great opportunity to both investors and tenants.
